After the War--What? This Question Is Puzzler

recognized that hundreds of thousands of men who have had a taste of a broader existence than the old one, will not tolerate a return to the former order of things.

The suggestion most frequently heard is that the landlords will be forced to dispose of their great holdings at reasonable prices, on some such basis as the one already prevailing in Ireland. Others favor a more or less approximation to the single tax.

Taking into account the relief this will effect in labor congestion in the industrial centers, and the fact that there undoubtedly will be a heavy emigration to the colonies, it seems fair to predict an immense betterment in the masses' lot in post-bellum England.

England inevitably will cease to be a free trade country after the war. Reciprocity will prevail between the mother country and her colonies. It may include all the present allies.

The tariff's purpose will be, partly, revenue. More particularly it will be for protection against Germany. The English policy is not, in general, for protection against neutrals, but it is hard to see how it can be avoided in this case, as Germans might otherwise establish their factories in neutral countries, get their raw material from home and set the protection program at naught.

Already plans are under discussion for preventing the employing class from getting the benefit, to the workers' disadvantage, of the higher prices it is expected this tariff will mean. One suggestion is for a minimum wage. This is not very generally favored, however. Its opponents say it is too elastic a method to work satisfactorily. It is unlikely it will be adopted.

Another proposition looks toward a profit sharing system, so scientific-ly worked out that price increases will automatically mean correspondingly larger incomes for workmen.

A still more radical scheme contemplates government control or even government ownership of all manufacturing industries.

Inasmuch as the tariff will have to be imposed with labor's consent and aid, there is no question that labor's interests will have to be duly considered. Indications are that the result's form may be more or less socialistic.

It is a pretty safe prediction that the war is going to be followed by important internal changes in most, if not all the belligerent countries.

Perhaps these changes will be for the worse. Obviously there is far less liberty in belligerent and even neutral Europe today than there was before the war. If this condition should become chronic, of course the war's result can be set down as entirely bad. If plutocracy succeeds in getting a still tighter stranglehold on the people than it had before, things will be all the worse.

The people seem to realize this, however, and are pretty watchful.

So it looks as if the odds favor changes in the line of improvement, a big improvement and soon, at least in spots.

Are revolutions likely? Peaceful, economic revolutions? Yes, very likely indeed.

But an overturning of governments? Of some, maybe; not all. There is hardly a suggestion of such a thing in England. The situation is said to be the same in France.

British officials believe that a complete governmental overturning is a distinct possibility in the case of the central powers, perhaps so soon as to shorten the war. The Italian government's position was notoriously precarious long before the war began. There is no reason for believing it is less so today.

Curiously enough, the Russian regime, supposedly the most unpopular with the people of any in Europe, appears to have been enormously strengthened by the world struggle. All accounts indicate its entire safety for the present, though there is a general belief that its post-bellum methods, largely with the ruling classes' approval, will be greatly liberalized.

Moving Pictures

"The Battle Cry of Peace," the wonderful photo-spectacle shown here in February, which is the recognized masterpiece of the motion picture art, is to be presented here again. In response to popular request, J. V. Houston has booked the film for a two nights exhibition, and it will be shown at the Houston opera house April 24 and 25. The Peerless Orchestra, which rendered the special musical score so effectively when Sinnott & Hubbard presented the feature film, will again attend to the important musical end of the production, thereby adding much to the wonderful realism of the powerful theme, which deals barehanded with facts of vital importance to the future of the United States.

When shown here before, "The Battle Cry of Peace" played to packed houses, many being unable to get in the opera house for the evening performance.

MATCH PRICES SOARING ON ACCOUNT OF WAR

United Press Service
ST. PAUL, Minn., April 6.—Rubbing sticks again may become the world's way of making fire. The price of matches is still soaring. Soon boxes selling now for a penny may be bringing ten cents. This was the declaration today of T. E. Tucker, match manufacturer of Chicago, who says that of the thirty-seven chemicals used in making matches, the majority are imported from foreign countries now at war, and cannot be gotten.

MT. LAKI ITEMS

The debate last night on the question of the United States adopting the essential features of the Swiss military training system resulted in a victory for the three high school boys, Charles N. Dorr, Rollin Stitzer and Verne McClellan, who supported the affirmative, against Rev. Morgan, T. Griffith and M. B. Ford. The debate was highly interesting, many splendid points being brought out in favor of both sides of the interesting question.

Mr. Koonts helped E. S. Phillips in butchering work Monday.

Tom Watters was in Klamath Falls attending to business matters yesterday.

Mrs. C. A. Hill, who is suffering with pleurisy, is reported as somewhat worse at present.

Rev. Morgan and Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Case will attend the evangelical meetings in Klamath Falls this afternoon and evening.
